Titanium-based alloys are widely used for orthopaedic implants, as they combine great mechanical properties with good biocompatibility. However, the formation of intermetallic compounds and gamma-Ti phase in the near-surface region reduces the biocompatibility of the implant. In this study, a TiO(2)-P(2)O(5)-CaO-MgO-ZnO-Na(2)O-CaF(2) biocompatible bioactive porous titanium alloy plate (P-Ti) was prepared via a dip-casting process, using aqueous titanium(IV 82157476af
